Keep on Shaggin'

February 1998

From the President . . . by Vesta Jones

SOS Memberships are now on sale through our shag club until Feb. 18th for only $30. After that you'll need to buy your membership by mail for $35.00. You'll get into all the dance clubs FREE during SOS at BOTH the Spring Safari and Fall Migration (and into the Myrtle Beach clubs 2001 and Celebrations); the SOS newspaper Carefree Times will be mailed directly to you; discounts at various businesses that offer special prices to SOS members; free tram service during SOS; support for junior SOS (for our shagging children), AND you'll be contributing to the National Hospice. It's a bargain...take advantage of this service through the club.

ACSC meetings at 9:00 A.M. on Saturday morning at Mid-Winter...Arrghh! It's a test, isn't it, to see who is really committed to this??? The mid-winter ACSC business meeting was just a preview of the big meeting in February that will be in Atlantic Beach. However, there were a couple of significant items that may be of interest to our club at this time: For the spring SOS parade - there will be prize money for the club floats and prize money for "marching" troops ... several of us are working on an idea for our club... if you want to be part of this, see Pauline! AND as part of the parade there is the "All Male Beauty Contest"...any takers from our club? It's a scream....lots of fun and a great way to be part of the camaraderie of SOS.

* Shag clubs that wish to become corporate sponsors of the Junior Shag Association may do so for $30/year.

* A task force is being assembled to address the possibility of having at least one smoke-free club at SOS.

* The ACSC By-laws are being reviewed: Vesta is one of the 3 members of the task force to review them.

If you have any comments or ideas about any of these items, please let us know. Vesta, Dennis, and Beverly (at the very least) are going to be attending the ACSC Winter Workshop in Atlantic Beach, Feb. 21st... we want to represent your interests...let us hear from you.

The Man's Dance? . . . by Chris Pax

Wow. I really don't want to make anyone feel uncomfortable, but there is something I think we should think about.... Why do we keep telling everyone, particularly new students of shag, that, "This is a man's dance?"

The first time I heard someone say something like this, I asked him about it after the class. I appreciated that he was pretty honest with me about where he was coming from: "Well, that's the way it is in shag, isn't it? Shouldn't we tell it like it is?"

Well, ...hmmm, ...let's take a look at that. When someone says, "This is a man's dance," they usually mean more than just that shag is a dance where the guy leads and the woman follows. It's a lot stronger than that. There are lots of dances where the man leads, but these dances are not described as "a man's dance."

You know, I have heard those stories about male shaggers of the past, who would walk right off the dance floor and leave their female partners alone, hopefully humiliated, if they tried to do "too much." How do we view those dancers today? Are they remembered as heroes who helped preserve an important piece of shag heritage, or do we hear these stories with a twinge of amusement, and even embarrassment, about the way women were treated in that day and age?

We all know that shag has changed a lot in the past 10-15 years. We know that mirror patterns and lead-and-follow moves are taking a larger chunk of floor time, relative to the all "male lead" style of the early days of shag. We have all heard that female competitors will now, on occasion, do the splits and other moves typically thought of as "male lead," and receive wild applause for this at competitions. Yet we persist in telling people that our beloved shag is "a man's dance."

Personally, I cringe when I hear that statement. I can only speak for myself, but it hurts just a little. That sort of statement makes me feel that somehow my role as a woman in this dance is unimportant, or not valued. That I am just a prop out there for the guy to show off his stuff, and I must always "remember my place." Do we really want our female shaggers to feel this way?

I'm sure that the people who say it don't intend to cause harm, but is it really a harmless statement? I wonder about what new female dancers think, when they hear this. Or even what the new male dancers think. How does that make them feel, about learning this dance? I have met some men who seem to enjoy running the show all the time, and want to be the only thing anyone pays attention to on the dance floor, and I guess that's OK, but I know MORE men who seem to prefer to share the spotlight sometimes; who prefer a full partner instead of a retiring, whatever-you-dear, follower. Tired of having to call every one of the shots, and maybe also genuinely curious, men do sometimes ask their partners, "Well, what would YOU like to do?" In this day and age, many men will even send a warm and appreciative smile to a female partner who executes a step well (and good for them -- we appreciate that!).

Many dances have leaders and followers, and usually it's the men who lead, the women who follow. And many dances have different ways of showcasing the talents of male and female dancers. That's what give each dance its own, special look and style. That's all great -- I'm certainly not trying to say that women should lead, in shag. I'm also not trying to say that male lead moves should be eliminated from the dance. Of course not! I love shag just the way it is! But I am suggesting that when we say, "This is a male-dominated dance" what happens, mostly, is that the woman's role in this dance is belittled. And I assert that maybe we've reached the point where we should not continue saying this.

Any two shaggers dancing together will eventually find their own balance of moves and make their own, unique statement. When I practice regularly with someone, the two of us work out an arrangement that suits us and our individual situation. From what I can tell, this is what most dancers do. Shaggers come in all kinds of personalities, and with a variety of talents and skills.

Add to all this the fact that shag itself is dynamic, alive, strong, and evolving, just as is the society of which this dance is a part. To isolate this dance and try to make shaggers behave as though they belonged to a society from the past, would be to doom it. Shag must, and in fact does, live and grow along with the society that sustains it.

"This is a man's dance," belies these facts. I think it puts a crude, over-simplified, and easily misunderstood wrapper around a complex and dynamic reality. It's something to think about. Do we really want to keep saying this, particularly when we're teaching? Couldn't we just let people watch, dance, and draw their own conclusions?

LOOKING for Someone?

There are many duties involved in running an organization the size of our club. When there were less than 100 members, the 7 or 9 Board Members had little trouble doing everything that needed to be done. But as we have grown to 280+ members, we could use some HELP from the members! Please volunteer to serve on a committee. Your club needs your help!!

John & Joan English Workshops a Hit!

... by Valerie Swiger

Hosting out-of-town shaggers is always so much fun. I love having a house full of people, and from the time John & Joan English arrived at noon on Friday it was a non-stop weekend. Their private lessons started at 4 p.m. and went until 10 p.m. Somewhere in that time frame we were able to sit down for a quick meal and get to know them a little better.

They have been married for 34 years, have one daughter, and a four-month-old granddaughter. John is retired from Lockheed Martin, and Joan works for the College of Charleston. John could survive on chocolate chip cookies, and both are avid followers of ice dancing competition.

The five groups that took privates on Friday all agreed that the English's are superb teachers. They mixed excellent suggestions with laughter and patience.

Saturday was filled with three dance workshops, each lasting an hour and a half, and then a dance that evening. And although both were suffering from some sort of seasonal malady, they put on a beautiful demo Saturday night.

They had planned to stay until late Sunday to teach some more private lessons, but they were just too sick, especially Joan. We wish to thank them for making the long drive from Charleston, S.C., and hope that by the time of this article that they are both fully recovered.

$ Change for Charity $

NVSC has chosen the Hospice of Northern Virginia as our club charity. Dave Shipp is the new chairman of this event. Throughout the year, we will be conducting different projects to raise funds for this worthy cause. We have started a "Change for Charity" jar that will be at all of our events, so please donate generously..... throw your spare change into the jar!

ATTENTION!

If you (or someone you know) would like to be a vendor at the 1998 Capital Shag Classic, please contact Valerie Swiger at 703-281-9193 for details.
